Correct Fall Neckwear.

"The woman who finds that she simply cannot wear one of the fashionable Dutch collars or Toby frills will be glad to know that a great deal of high neckwear will be worn this fall and winter, such as high stiff stocks with long jabots," says Edith Weldenfeld in Woman's Home Companion. "There will also be a return of the old-time 'dickie'—a stiff chemise of linen. It will be made with or without an attached collar to wear with V-neck tailored blouses. And the woman to whom the low-cut waists are becoming can still wear these comfortable blouses and be quite as modish as she was last spring and summer."

THE DUTCH COLLAR.

From the Philadelphia Press.

If the becomingness of the Dutch neck were as assured as its comfort and popularity this little talk would not be. Go slow in wearing the Dutch neck unless you have taken an unprejudiced look at yourself in a mirror with a strong light upon it. Better roast and wilt high collars than to be the sights most women are in the present neck cuts.

Except for a very young face there is no style so trying or so hardening to the lines of the face. This is particularly true if the neck is sinewy and very long.

There are Dutch necks and Dutch necks. The only alternative when your ugliness scares you need not be an over-heating choker collar. Experiment until you get a becoming angle. The shallow square or narrow V can often be worn when a round neck makes one look hideous.

A velvet of a becoming color around the throat will often make the collarless frock less trying. This should not be more than half an inch wide if coolness is an object.

Especially bad is the Dutch neck with a frill, unless one cares to resemble a Pierrot. The young face can sometimes stand it, but when seen on the thick-necked fat-faced woman the on-looker is moved to unseemly mirth and tongue-cackling.

Just a word as to the times for the Dutch neck. Despite custom, it is not good form on the street with a hat, save perhaps in the evening. Traveling or in the shopping district the woman who would be considered well dressed reconciles herself to sweltering.

With a tailored blouse the collar low in front is almost as cool as a Dutch cut to the neck, no matter if the latter comes just to the base of the throat.

Particularly unbecoming is a necktie or beads worn over the strictly Dutch neck. They may look all right when the cut is deep enough to show a line of neck between the neckline and top of blouse, but are ugly in deed with a higher cut.

If you will wear the Dutch neck keep off a hat as much as possible, as it heightens the trying qualities. Also see to it that your throat is kept smooth and unmarked, if it takes all your spare time for massage and your pocket money for whitening lotions.

An Artistic Salad.

"That is the most artistic looking pineapple salad I have ever seen," said a guest to her hostess. "Most of them look as messy as if they had been gathered from the refuse of plates. How did you ever get the pieces so even?"

"It's the way I cut my pineapple," was the reply. "An old Southern cook taught me. Do not part it, but with a fork, begin at the lowest row of scales and lift out a chunk of the fruit at a time. Go around the entire melon, then begin at the second row and continue to the top. This removes all the meat save the core."

"When the pieces are out all that is necessary is to cut off the bit of rind and your salad is ready to dress. I leave the pineapple on the ice for two hours before serving."

"At the last I mix with mayonnaise made with lemon and whipped cream, and sprinkle the top thickly with paprika to give a touch of color."

MENUS AND RECIPES.

Today's Menu.

Breakfast. Cereal with milk. Creamed potatoes. Syrup.

Dinner. Stuffed chicken. Mint sauce. Stuffed sweet potatoes. Choice of frozen fruit.

Supper. Coffee. Shrimp and cucumber salad. Peach shortcake. Chocolate.

Recipes.

Hot mint sauce—Mint sauce, to go with lamb, may be either hot or cold. To make the former, put into a small saucepan five or six sprigs of fresh mint, a bay leaf, a teaspoonful of vinegar, a teaspoonful of sugar, one tablespoonful of oil, a stock, and the beaten white of an egg. Bring to boiling point, then simmer gently for ten minutes. Thicken with a teaspoonful of cornstarch, add a few fresh chopped mint leaves and serve.

Cold mint sauce—To make the cold mint sauce, put three tablespoonfuls of freshly chopped mint into a basin, add two tablespoonfuls of sugar, then drop in one dessertspoonful of oil; add one egg of vinegar. If too strong, a little water may be added.

The Spirit of Rochester.

"Any man who has ever attended a convention in Rochester—and it is a city given to conventions—goes away wishing he could bring up his children in Rochester," says Anna Steege Richardson in the Woman's Home Companion.

"Any woman, not wholly given over to the most superficial form of social existence, comes away from that town wishing she could engage in the sort of work Rochester women are doing."

"And yet Rochester is no Utopia. It is a city of tremendous commercial and manufacturing interests. Out of its population of 210,000, 45,919 men and women are employed in its 1,200 factories which represent an annual output of $100,000,000 worth of goods. The annual payroll for those employed in the city's various factories is $19,533,117, which means an income of $427.60 per capita. And 20,000 of its women and girls work for $3 a week or less. Nothing remarkable, you see, about the scale of wages."

"Moreover, you always connect huge manufacturing interests with smokestacks, hideous outlooks, a plethora of work and a shortage in recreations. And right here Rochester differs from almost any other manufacturing city. It has the smokestacks without the hideous outlook and the long hours of work balanced by well-planned hours of recreation. Rochester people work, but they think of something besides work. Mostly they think of Rochester, its needs and its advantages, its planned improvements, and its present beauties; but they seem to think very little of themselves, as individuals, above all things as being overworked and underpaid. This broad outlook, this unselfish viewpoint, express the Rochester spirit."

Cruelty to Animals.

Hazel, aged seven, while feeding the cat at the dinner table, was reproved by her father, who told her that the cat must wait until later, whereupon the small girl wept and said:

"I think it is a shame, just because she is a poor dumb animal, to treat her like a hired girl."

THE WOMAN HAS TO HELP

Man Proposes but Often Has to Have Assistance in "Popping Question."

We suppose, writes Rev. E. J. Hardy, the author of "How to Be Happy Though Married," in the London Graphic, that when the new woman consents to marry she will take the proposing into her own hands. She will feel that this should come from her as the superior being. But even before the days of advanced woman's rights lame dogs were helped over stiles. Indeed, so shy are mere men that hardly any of them would dare to propose to a woman if she did not go half way to meet him. The following are instances of women going the whole and not merely half the way.

Some people waste much energy by not knowing how to wait, say, at railway stations or when meals do not come up in time. They might at least observe and think, but they only fuss and fidget themselves and others. In a better way did a man of whom I have heard spend or rather have his time spent. He was waiting for a train in the refreshment room at a large station.

It was presided over by a good-looking girl who happened to have red hair. The gentleman asked if she could oblige him with a match.

"With pleasure, if you do not object to a red-headed one," she replied, with such a suggestive, demure smile that she aroused his interest. And now they are a very happy couple.

A sea captain called at a village inn and asked the landlady, a young widow: "Do you know where I can get a mate? I have lost my mate."

"I am very sorry for you, Mr. —," she said, smiling. "I want a mate, too, and cannot get one. As we are in the same position I'll tell you what I'll do: if you'll be mine, I will be yours."

He closed with the bargain, and the widow, keeping her word, he is now supplied with two mates.

A shy young man once said to a young lady: "I wish, dear, that we were on such terms of intimacy that you would not mind calling me by my first name."

"Oh," she replied, "your second name is good enough for me."

Should women propose, or even give as much help over the stiles as these ladies did? Even in other years than leap year we think that they may when men would be too shy to carry the effort through, and very prettily did Queen Victoria do this.

My own opinion is that we men are so modest and retiring that none of us would dare to propose marriage to a woman unless she came just a little bit of the way to meet us.

But the sex is so good-natured in helping lame dogs over a stile! An Irish girl did it in this way. She thought that her boy was slow in coming to the point, so she said:

"If I were you, Jack, and you were me, we'd be married long ago."

William M. Chase's Top Hat.

"William M. Chase was a picturesque figure, dressing in clothes that had a certain artistic originality, though they conformed more or less to the prevailing fashions," says Arthur Hoebner, A. N. A., in the Woman's Home Companion. "He invariably wore a high hat with an unusually flat brim, then a novelty in this city, though popular in artistic circles in Paris. Such a hat he has worn ever since, though he is so much alone in this fashion as in the old days."

"They tell a story of this famous hat. On one occasion, Chase, on his way home, stopped in a little wine shop and ordered a jug of claret of a white brand sent to his house. The lad who brought it came to the front door, an hour afterward, when the artist had already arrived. 'Some wine,' he said curtly. The maid, knowing there was plenty in the cellar, and opining the lad had made a mistake, said she was sure it was not for that house, and did the boy remember the name of the man who ordered it. The boy didn't. Then, said the servant, 'you've come to the wrong place; we never ordered wine! At this moment the boy spied the famous hat on the hall table. 'Say,' he asked, 'does that hat live here?' 'Yes,' said the amused maid. 'Then, said the boy triumphantly, 'here's where the wine belongs.'"

Hint to Hostesses.

From the Philadelphia Star.

Don't give parties—except actual masquerades—in which you must ask your guests to appear in any special costume. They dislike the trouble, and rightly feel that they are coming to be entertained, and not to help in the performance. Sometimes the command to "wear a white shirt waist and skirt," or "represent a famous book" really means a great deal of trouble to its recipient. If the success of your party depends on this co-operation on the part of your guests, by all means give another kind of party.
